Wise.

A copy of the first issue of "The War Sayer," the official journal of all the war savings societies in the country, was received in New York yeaterday. It contains a message from President Wilson, reading, in part, as follows:

"I suppose not many fortunate by products will come out of the war, but if this country can learn something about assing it will be worth the cost of the war; I mean the literal cost of the w go as lar as we like this time and then promise to be good. Any one who has seen Mabel Normand will admit that there are extenuating circumstances.

"The Floor Below" is a worthy successor to "Dodging a Million," although it is not at all similar in story or treatment.

It is not at all similar in story or treatment.

It is a tale of newspaper people and their doings, and all of the journalists who believe that there is no romance in a newspaper office should go to see the n hewspaper office should go to see the picture and be convinced.

In the rôle of Patricia O'Rourke Miss Normand has a chance to bring to her aid all of the art and the artlessness which is hers. We sincerely admire Mabel Normand. There is complete conservation of effort in her work; every expression over presture here. every expression, every gesture, has a meaning all its own. She recalls to our mind, always, Laurette Taylor, our favorite actress.
